It's easy to search Wikibooks by topic, and there are separate sections for recipes and childrens' textbooks. You can download any page as a PDF using a link provided in the left-hand menu, but unfortunately there's no support for other formats. There's also Collection Creator - a handy tool that lets you collate several pages, organize them, and export them together (again, in PDF format). It's a nice feature that enables you to customize your reading material, but it's a bit of a hassle, and is really designed for readers who want printouts. The easiest way to read Wikibooks is simply to open them in your web browser.

There is no such thing as no money down because the money is going to come from somewhere. It's money down if you're going to have to do something if you have to exchange something with the person giving you something. If they're going to give it to you for nothing, then trust me, you don't want it. So the question becomes, how would you raise money if you don't have any money? The first thing I say, and I say this over and over, is that the deal is what matters, not how much money ...
